PREFACE

In China, the period from 1966 to 1969 witnessed the onset of the so-called Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution - a movement which due to its character and consequences was unparalleled in the history of the People's Republic of China.

In 1965 China found itself at a crossroad which was to determine its further development. At this time there were bitter struggles within the Communist Party of China about a great many key problems both of an internal - political nature - these mostly involved the forms and methods of socialist construction in China or the role of the Communist Party at that particular period of development - and on foreign policy as well. The relations of the People's Republic of China to the USSR and other socialist countries, the approach of China to the USA, and the attitude and role of the People's Republic of China towards the "Third World" were under discussion in particular.

The end of 1965 marked the conclusion of the five year period of "reforms and consolidations" in the national economy recovering from a deep and protracted crisis which had its roots in the so-called Great Leap Forward and the people's communes policy of 1958-1960, created on Mao Tse-tung's initiative. The attempts of the Maoist leaders to assume the leading role in the international communist and working class movement, as well as to form a block of pro-Maoist parties, failed completely. Likewise, the efforts to push through the hegemonic ambitions of the Chinese leadership of the "Third World Countries" and national liberation movements was a dismal failure. Due to the escalation of American intervention and aggression in Indochina the question of China's security was bound to come more pronounced.

Under these circumstances, at the end of 1965, the latent struggle became acute within the Chinese leadership on basic problems of domestic and foreign policy. The relation of forces engaged in this contest did not permit some leaders, concentrated around the person of Mao Tse-tung, to crush their opponents and enemies by normal inner-Party discussion. The Maoist leadership was therefore compelled to resist the drive of party organs and popular pressure from "outside", through the services of a segment of deceived and misled young people. The so-called Cultural Revolution thus served as a tool for the Maoist faction of the leadership to remove enemies and opponents from political life and power, to usurp power in the Party and the country, and to induce China to adopt an anti-Marxist and anti-Leninist course.

In autumn, 1965, the Maoist leadership launched a campaign against several Chinese writers and playwrights, which, in fact, proved the overture to the so-called Cultural Revolution. In the spring of 1966 the Maoists attacked the Municipal Committee of the Communist Party of China in Peking and the Propaganda Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. On August 1-12, 1966, the 11th plenary session of the Communist Party's Central Committee was held which hailed "Mao Tse-tung's Thoughts" as the basis of all the Party's activities. In foreign policy, the plenary session outlined a course of struggle against the USSR and other socialist countries; starting with provocations against members of the Soviet diplomatic staff and Soviet citizens, the Maoist leadership turned to organizing armed conflicts and incidents on the Sino-Soviet frontier in 1969. Anti-Soviet doctrine thus became an accompanying phenomenon of the "Cultural Revolution" and a sort of vent designed by the Maoist leadership to release the overall tension in the country, for which internal disputes, originating from the country's anti-Marxist policy, were mostly responsible.

Simultaneously with the 11th plenary session, on August 5th, 1966, Mao Tse-tung published his militant leaflet "Begin fire on the staffs" which brought serious accusations against some central Party leaders and those in the provinces "that they had exercised a dictatorship of the bourgeoisie". This pamphlet actually was a signal to destroy and dismiss both central and local Party organs, now denounced as "bourgeois staffs".

The protagonists most readily indulging in these hostile activities against the so-called "staffs" were for the most part politically misled and misguided young people, recruited from secondary schools, and university students organized in the so-called Red Guards under the leadership of officers. Once the Red Guards had played their role, the Maoist leadership did not hesitate later on to summon army forces to help suppress and dispel the Red Guard centres.

The Red Guards were far from being a compact, united organization, although the activities of the majority were inspired and controlled by the so-called Central Committee Cultural Revolution Group headed by Ch'en Po-ta and Mao Tse-tung's wife Chiang Ch'ing.

Individual Red Guard units and many other institutions, for instance, staffs, headquarters, liaison centres, etc. issued their publications during the course of the "Cultural Revolution" - mostly newsletters, periodicals, etc. The latter carried many resolutions and instructions from Maoist leaders. They included much "material" directed against so-called "handful in power who follow the capitalist path", blackening and discrediting these persons. They also indicate several other problems, for instance the ideas and proposals broadly discussed at that time for reform of the educational system in China. They often reflected rather naïve views of the young people on their role in managing "important state affairs" which they were promised by the Maoist leaders. They reveal in full the differences and contradictions between the individual Red Guard units and other institutions, the endless struggles and enmities, including outright armed clashes.

The Red Guard publications are, therefore, a sort of mirror of the past stormy era. They are all the more interesting in that many loudly proclaimed principles of the Maoist leadership were later completely abandoned. Moreover, some of the leading protagonists in this so-called Cultural Revolution, e.g. Ch'én Po-ta, Lin Piao and others, have already disappeared from Chinese political scene.

The collection of Red Guard Publications held by the Lu Hsün Library of the Oriental Institute of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences in Prague comprises 225 newspaper and periodical titles of different size and length; these titles total 577 issues with 2,619 pages. The collection covers, though incompletely, the publications of Red Guards from October 1966 to February 1968. Three issues (Nos. 122, 129b, 153b) bear the year of edition (1967), but there is no record as to month; four issues (Nos. 12, 24, 144 and 145) even lack the year of edition.

With regard to the total number of individual issues of Red Guard publications in the various months, our collection contains the following:

The present list of Red Guard publications consists of three parts:

Part I comprises the Alphabetical List of Titles of Red Guard Publications in the Lu Hsün Library of the Oriental Institute and their Editorial Boards. The first item on the list represents the numbering of the titles (1-225). The number is followed by the transcription of the journal's title (in capital letters); below the title is the transcription of the names of the editorial boards. The names of the editorial boards of the individual journals of one and the same title often changed. In such cases all changes in the names of the editorial boards are given under the journal's title, marked a, b, c, etc. The next line provides the basic bibliographical data about the title in question, in the following order: year of edition, issue number (or other specific name; see Technical Terms at the end of this Preface), in brackets the day and month, and finally the number of pages (one item, 52a- No. 11, is an incomplete issue in the Lu Hsün library). All missing data in the original are marked sine. If the original journal also has a sub-title, or originally had one name and later dropped it, this is also given in brackets in our list following the title of the journal (e.g. Nos. 26, 44 etc.). Should more titles appear on the name of the newspaper, such a journal is then filed according to the first title, the subsequent components of the title being without references (e.g. No. 202, Tung-fang hung Ching-kang-shan Hung-ch'i; the journal is then filed under Tung-fang hung). Should more journals possess identically sounding titles (e.g. Ching-kang-shan, Tung-fang hung etc.) these journals are filed alphabetically according to the editorial boards. Sometimes it is difficult to decide - when journals have the same title - whether it is the identical journal simply with altered names of the editorial boards, or whether these are different journals whose identical names may be purely accidental. Although fully aware of these shortcomings in our work, we were unable to avoid them fully. Furthermore, it was difficult to determine the order of the individual editorial boards of an issue since publication largely depended on the typesetter's requirements. Where the publication bears two datings, both are given (see No. 176).

Part II of this publication is made up of the Alphabetical List of Editorial Boards in English transcription with reference to the serial numbers of the title list. The incorporation of this part into our work was not only motivated by the fact that some editorial boards edited two journals (such instances, however, are rare in our collection), but mostly because the choice of names of editorial boards more aptly reflects a certain historical background as well as numerous needs and trends of a particular period rather than the name of the journal itself. Sometimes the title of the editorial board seems almost too general (e.g. Revolutionary Rebels of Mao Tse-tung's Thought, Mao Tse-tung szu-hsiang ko-ming tsao-fan-p'ai), at other times a group ad hoc is involved (see e.g. the whole series of monothematic issues criticizing some persons, etc.). If we take the incomplete collection of the Red Guard publications in the Lu Hsün library as the starting point for our list we see that the term "Mao Tse-tung szu-hsiang" (Mao Tse-tung's Thought) is used throughout while the term "Mao-tse-tung-chu-i" (Maoism) is used only at the beginning of 1967 and very rarely later on. It is certainly not fortuitous that the editorial boards as of March 1967 modified their titles by adding "Assembly of Red Guard Representatives" (hung-tai-hui).

The places of edition of individual Red Guard publications can be traced only partially, mostly again from the name of their editorial boards. Some of them list the name of the city, some only the name of the province or a larger region. From our collection of 225 titles we can identify their origin as follows: 165 (over 70 %) originate in Peking (this locality comprises publications of Peking University, Ch'ing-hua University, the People's University, etc.), 15 titles come from Tientsin, 4 from Shanghai, 2 from Chungking, 2 from Nanking, 2 from Pao-ting (Hopei), 2 from Wu-han (Hu-pei), 2 from Tung-pei, i.e. North-eastern China. One title comes from each of the following: the towns An-yang (Honan), Ch'ang-sha (Hunan), Harbin (Heilungkiang), Mi-yün (Hopei), T'ang-shan (Hopei), provinces Kirin, Honan, Hopei, Shansi, the region Hsiang-chiang, and the Sinkiang Uighur autonomous region. Some editions referred to as "local" were probably prepared in Peking. The present statistical analysis clearly shows that - with minor exceptions - the Red Guard publications in the Lu Hsün library represent materials chiefly from Peking and localities in the northern regions of the country.

To a certain extent one can judge from the names of the editorial boards the working sites or fields of activities the editorial boards claim to represent. In some cases the topics overlap since many editors took part in bringing out their publications; however, sometimes the names of the editorial boards are too vague to determine reliably any social classification of their members. Being well aware of all the perils of such a classification, we have nevertheless tried to classify the material into several categories regardless of its convenience (the numbers in brackets give the total of periodical titles). Naturally the sphere most actively involved in promoting the "Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution" is best represented: the educational field starting from elementary schools up to universities and colleges. They form a total of 106 titles of which 78 titles are from higher, secondary vocational schools and institutions, 25 titles from secondary schools, 2 titles from elementary schools, and 1 title devoted to education in general. Judging from numbers of titles we may list the order of sequence as follows: publishing houses (11), theatre (10), cinema (8), institutions dealing with cultural problems (7), assemblies representing workers and employees (6), the organizations of railways (5), commercial organizations (5), public health organizations (4), press agencies (4), spokesmen of various ministries (4), physical training (4), musical ensembles (3), construction (3), foreign cultural relations committees (2), army units (2), the women's federation (1), the writer's association (1), the association of philatelists (1).

The third and final part of this publication consists of Finding List of Chinese Characters including characters to Part I of this work, v. Alphabetical List of Titles of Red Guard Publications and Their Editorial Boards. Serial numbers correspond to those in the title list. For technical reasons it was necessary to write the characters by hand (calligraphically made by our Chinese collaborator) and to photograph them for print. The characters retain the same form as the ones in the original. This explains why the characters are sometimes given in abbreviated form (chien-t'i-tzu) or, at times, in their full form (cheng-t'i-tzu). In conclusion, we list the characters to the Technical Terms (Abbreviations) section following the preface.

In transcribing the Chinese we strictly adhered to the Wade-Giles system but following current practice we omitted the circumflex (^) over the -e- and breve (v) over the -u-. Sometimes it was hard to decide which term should be written together (i.e. with a hyphen), which one separately, which with capital initials, etc. But it is not the task of librarians to assume a linguistic burden. Generally we tried to observe the following principle: personal, local and particular names of organizations (e.g. Pa . i-wu hung-wei-ping, Tung-fang hung kung-she, etc.) are given in capital initials, but capitals are not used for "technical" terms (hung-wei-ping and many others). The term Pa . i-wu (August 15th) hung-wei-ping can be alternatively transcribed as Pa . shih-wu (in the original this term is written in Arabic figures "8.15"). We adopted the first form of transcription because the title used by the editorial board of this journal in Chinese characters was Pa . i-wu.

The staff of the Lu Hsün library originally intended to classify all articles contained in the 2,619 pages of its collection according to subject-matter and to stress some of their characteristic features (poems, songs, folk literature, caricature, etc.). But after having elaborated about 150 pages we were forced to stop since the result of our work would have been too extensive and unwieldy for publication purposes.

We consider this publication a bibliographical guide to and catalogue of the collection owned by the Lu Hsün library. This material is but a minute fraction of the published material of countless groups which were the moving force of the "Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution" in the People's Republic of China. It is well known that other sinological centres throughout the world have also been collecting similar publications. It is our firm belief that, from the point of view of the historical, political and internal ideological development in China and with regard to its international implications as well, it would serve the purpose of scientific study on the given period to publish lists of these materials in order to enable other sinological institutions to supplement their collections with microfilm and xerox copies. This would mark the first step and an essential prerequisite for further serious scholarly efforts.
